Food Companies Seek Ways to Use Coconut Milk

NEW YORK.—Anybody know a good way to use coconut milk—in huge quantities?

A few gourmets' recipes call for it. But one of the nation's biggest processors of the hard shelled nut has been trying for years to figure out a way to salvage it. Milk of the tropical nut, however, is one of the few by-products of the food industry which is thrown away.

Figuring out ways of using leftovers is just one of the research jobs in progress all over the country today. Most of the big food companies employ scientists, working in modern laboratories, whose job is to improve established products and develop new ones.

Thomas M. Rector, a big, good-natured Virginian, is the vice-president in charge of research and development for General Foods corporation, which markets a large variety of products. What to do with coconut milk is one of the few things that has him—at the moment—stopped.

"We package the meat of the nut," he explained, "we sell the shells to industry, because they make a very high grade of charcoal—in World War I all gas masks used charcoal from coconut shells. But we dump the milk in the river."

Small Sugar Content

The sugar content of the milk is only four per cent, so it's impractical to try to distill it as alcohol. The supply is irregular; it's not a popular drink.

Meanwhile, however, there's still work being done on leftovers, because big companies, like housewives, dislike throwing good things away.

Take de-caffeinized coffee. Caffein is actually removed from the bean. But is it thrown away?

"Of course not," said Rector. "It's sold to drug houses for medical preparations. And it is sold to people who make cola drinks."

Then fish—Rector's company freezes it.

"We prepare frozen red perch fillets," he said. "For every 100 pounds of red perch, there's 30 pounds of fillets. The other 70 pounds would be wasted—but of course it's not. It's chewed up and made into chicken feed. Leftovers from cod and haddock go into dog food."

Apples Contain Pectin

Everybody knows apples are full of pectin—the stuff that makes jelly jell. But Rector's organization also found pectin in the skins of citrus fruits. So now they extract the juices, chop up the fruit—and process the leftover skins into powdered pectin.

Sometimes, of course, a new product is not developed in the laboratories. Like the time the cousin of the emperor of Afghanistan walked into Rector's office with a revolutionary process for processing rice.

The gentleman from Afghanistan had just happened on a method the food people had been looking for for years—a rice that would be ready to serve after a few minutes cooking. The man from Afghanistan has a patent on the process, General Food sells the product—and everybody is very happy, including the income tax collector.

Which doesn't milk a coconut—commercially—but someday that nut will be cracked, too.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

It's Your Fight, Too!

ing Crowley was "beefing" the er day about all that Our Town's in the way of sending food clothes to Europe. Bing felt those struggling democracies uld look after themselves.

But most agreed with Judge nningham who said: "So long any family or individual in rope is helping hold the line for edom—against the forces of in-erance—it's common sense, and mon decency, to help 'em."

Because that's everybody's fight: see that individual freedom is preserved in every aspect, big or little—whether it's the right to vote, or the right to enjoy a temperate glass of beer or ale with friends.

And from where I sit, no liberty's too small to overlook. Because the minute one small freedom is threatened, all the others are in jeopardy—just as the minute one small country loses freedom, all its neighbors are in danger!

Swank Home Owners Engage In Used Furniture Racket

CLEVELAND.—Police are cracking down on a second-hand furniture racket in swank suburban Shaker Heights.

Some women in the suburb, police reported, have been buying used furniture at junk shops and auction sales, advertising later that they were leaving town and selling their furnishings.

Prospective buyers, impressed by the lavishness of the homes, would buy the junk furniture at more than three times the original price.

The Shaker Heights women put "sold" tags on their own high-priced furniture to prevent its purchase by bargain hunters, police said.

Some 25 wealthy matrons reportedly have been engaged in the racket. Police say that in some cases the husbands of the enterprising women knew of their activities and were "highly embarrassed."

Wife's Character Affects Husband's Chances for Job

CLEVELAND.—A man who gets paid for deciding on other men's job qualifications says that the character of a job-seeker's wife is as important as his own ability.

Regardless of how bright a candidate for a swivel-chair may be, George Trundle turns thumbs down if the man's wife nags, drinks, talks too much or is overly critical.

"We wouldn't think of placing a man in an important job without first finding out what his wife is like," added Trundle, president of Trundle Engineering company.

The theory is that a wife who doesn't measure up to "her own job" will keep a husband too disturbed to be successful in his.

"We used to spend six or seven years training men and then often lose them when they became really valuable—because of their wives. We just aren't doing that any more—it's too expensive," Trundle said.
